Biographical Note

Stewart Hall Holbrook emerged from logging camps to become, in the words of Lewis Gannett, “the only ex-lumberjack who has lectured at Harvard University on American history.” Holbrook, the “Lumberjack Boswell,” was born in Vermont on August 12, 1893. His father bounced around North America, taking the young Stewart with him, until dying suddenly in Manitoba. Now a teenager, Stewart found himself deposited alone on the Canadian plains. He survived with various jobs, including reporting for a Winnipeg newspaper and performing in a traveling dramatic stock company, before serving in France as an artillery sergeant during the First World War. After the war, he bought a round-trip ticket to British Columbia, curious to see the big trees he had heard about. He took employment in a logging camp, and was so enamored with the work and the region that he cashed in his return ticket. He spent the next three years as a clerk in isolated logging camps, while writing articles and drawing popular cartoons for the British Columbia Lumberman at night. His desire to pursue his writing career propelled him to Portland in 1923, lured by “the finest public library in the West.”

He spent the rest of the decade dividing his time between writing stories and freelance articles and the editing work that provided a semblance of a steady income. This precarious career crashed with the Great Depression. “The mss market,” he lamented, “is as bad off as the so-called stock market.”

Despite the lean years, he persevered, and was enjoying renewed success by the mid-1930s. He completed his first book during this time, but at least the first three publishers he solicited thought the manuscript warranted only a rejection slip. Finally, the Macmillan Company decided to publish it in 1938. Holy Old Mackinaw: A Natural History of the American Lumberjack spent five months on national best-seller lists. Fortified by the prospect of additional successes, he moved to Boston and began cranking out a steady and swift stream of additional books on a wide variety of historical subjects, establishing himself as one of the country's most popular historians. He returned to the Pacific Northwest in the early 1940s to head the newly-created Keep Washington Green organization. The nonprofit corporation, grounded in the private forest industry and actively endorsed by the U.S. Forest Service and state government, popularized the problem of forest fire much as Smokey Bear would begin to do a few years later. Out of his work for the Keep Washington Green movement, Holbrook wrote Burning an Empire, the first, and for decades the only, history of wildlands fire.

Holbrook purposely set himself apart from academic history and the "timidity and woodenness usual to professors." He disliked the use of footnotes and presented his work as an alternative to what he saw as the arid and colorless output of "stuffed-shirt historians." He also wanted to resurrect important individuals neglected by academic history, a goal most explicitly followed in his 1946 Lost Men of American History. If his deliberate attempt to write "low-brow" history sprang from his inclinations, it also had a very practical dimension. Unlike most academic historians, Holbrook enjoyed neither a college paycheck nor fellowships; his income depended upon writing books that would sell in sufficient quantities. Yet, despite his zeal to write popular history, he never abandoned the desire to infuse his work with high literary quality. He never did resolve the tension between the often competing demands of the market and the muse.

He moved back to Portland in the mid-1940s, this time permanently, and continued his prolific production. He also undertook a second career, as the popular oil painter "Mr. Otis." Through Mr. Otis, Holbrook poked fun at the pretensions of modern art, while individual pieces such as "Someone has been here before us Meriwether" and "I was with Custer said the old man" allowed him to deflate myths surrounding the Little Big Horn and the "overly sentimental cult of the pioneer." In keeping with his mischievous personality, he never publicly admitted being Mr. Otis, whom he heralded as the founder of the "Primitive-Moderne School" of art. (The final "e" in moderne was indispensable, according to Holbrook. "It makes the word foreign hence fashionable.")

In the early 1960s, Holbrook suffered a series of incapacitating strokes which essentially curtailed his literary and artistic production. He died from complications of a heart attack in September 1964.

Holbrook published some of his crime stories under pseudonyms. These include: Marcus M. Clark, Chris K. Stanton, Stanley Underwood, Ethan O. Allen and Lee Howard. He also used the pseudonyms, Stewart Hall or Dutch in theater work.

Administrative Information

Arrangement

Arranged in 3 accessions:

Accession No. 0701-001, Stewart Hall Holbrook papers, 1904-1965

Accession No. 0916-001, Stewart Hall Holbrook correspondence with Lewis Gannet, 1943-1955

Accession No. 1272-001, Stewart Hall Holbrook sound recording, diploma, and scrapbooks, circa 1959

Detailed Description of the Collection

Accession No. 0701-001: Stewart Hall Holbrook papers, 1904-1965 (bulk 1940-1965)

35.03 cubic feet (59 boxes)

7 reels of microfilm (4 negative and 3 positive)

Scope and Content: Correspondence, literary manuscripts and other writings, diary, research material, speeches, notes, publications, ephemera, clippings, maps, film, and audiotape; 1904-1965. Also includes negative microfilm and positive microfilm user copies of selected volumes of the diary.

The material in this accession begins in the early 1920s, roughly concurrent with Holbrook's initial move to Portland, and continues until his death in 1964. While there is incoming correspondence dating from as early as 1923, the preponderance of it is from the 1940s and 1950s. Outgoing correspondence begins in 1925, and also is most heavily concentrated in later years. Other documents in the collection include manuscripts (drafts in various stages of completion as well as galley proofs), research notes, magazines and books, and his diary (with entries from 1904 to 1964). Also includes material from two organizations with which Holbrook was associated, Keep Washington Green and Oregon Freelance Writers Club.

Restrictions on Access: Open to all users.

Some material stored offsite; advance notice required for use.

Digital Content/Other Formats: Selections from Holbrook's diaries are available on microfilm, and may be borrowed through interlibrary loan. Selections include: Volumes 1-5, 1921, 1922, 1924-1926 (reel 1); volumes 6-10, 1927-1931 (reel 2); volumes 11-13, 1932-1934 (reel 3). A fourth reel of negative microfilm contains images of file cards for Holbrook's book collection.

Acquisition Info: Gift of Sibyl Holbrook, March 1967.

Processing Info: Partially processed.

Processed in the late 1960s. In 1996 additional processing was done. This consisted primarily of organizing and inventorying the publications with Holbrook articles and ephemera..

Three reels positive microfilm (user copies of selected Diary volumes) added to this accession March 29, 1999.

Processing Info: Photographs and postcards were relocated to the Stewart Holbrook Collection, PH Coll 511, in 1996.

Oil paintings were relocated to the Otis Collection, PH Coll 425.
