Biographical Note

George Edward Taylor (1905-2000) was a scholar of Chinese studies and director of the Far Eastern and Russian Institute at the University of Washington from 1946 to 1969. Considered one of the founders of modern Chinese studies in the United States, Taylor recruited internationally known scholars of the Soviet Union, China, Japan, and other countries to the institute in the 1940s and 1950s, and helped attract extensive federal and foundation support for international studies at the university. As deputy director of the U.S. Office of War Information for the Pacific Region during World War II, he established the Foreign Morale Analysis Division, which tapped the expertise of leading social scientists to study Japanese value systems in order to formulate psychological warfare and military policy against the Japanese, as well as policy toward the Japanese surrender. After the war, Taylor spoke out against the decision to drop atomic bombs on Japan, arguing that it was not based on evidence of Japanese intentions. Taylor was an outspoken opponent of U.S. recognition of the communist government of China in the 1950s and 1960s, and a supporter of U.S. policy in Vietnam in the 1960s and early 1970s.

George Taylor was born in Coventry, England, on December 13, 1905, and received his bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees in history and politics from the University of Birmingham. He received a doctor of letters degree from the University of Birmingham in 1957. Taylor first came to the United States in 1928 on a Commonwealth Fund fellowship to study at Johns Hopkins University and Harvard University. Awarded a Harvard-Yenching fellowship to study in China, he studied in Peking from 1930 to 1932. From 1933 to 1936, he was professor of international relations at the Central Political Institute in Nanking under the government of Chiang Kai-shek. He married Roberta Stevens White in 1933.

Taylor lived in London for a year (1936-37) before returning to China to teach at Yenching University near Peking. The Japanese invaded Northern China in the same year, but the university remained independent until after the Pearl Harbor bombing. Taylor spent the summer of 1938 traveling with the Eighth Route Army, a Chinese Communist guerilla force, in the provinces of Hopei and Shansi. He wrote a series of articles about the experience that were later published in the Manchester Guardian. During this period Taylor supported resistance to the Japanese by smuggling medical supplies from Peking to central Hopei, where they were transferred to Chinese guerillas. In the spring of 1939, he accepted an offer to become chair of the Department of Oriental Studies at the University of Washington. He became a naturalized U.S. citizen on May 11, 1943, in Richmond, Virginia.

In December 1942, Taylor took a leave of absence from the university to work for the Office of War Information as a Far East specialist. As deputy director in charge of Pacific operations, he concentrated on psychological warfare against Japan. He organized the Foreign Morale Analysis Division for the study of Japanese value systems, recruiting a team of 25 distinguished anthropologists and other social scientists. After the war, anthropologist Ruth Benedict drew upon the division's work to write The Chrysanthemum and the Sword, an analysis of Japanese culture. From 1945 to 1946, Taylor was director of the Office of Information and Cultural Relations for the Far East at the State Department. In this capacity, he wrote documents for the agency that would become the United States Information Service.

Taylor returned to the University of Washington in 1946 and became director of the Far Eastern and Russian Institute, a position he held until 1969. During his academic career, he was active in several national organizations and the recipient of numerous research grants and fellowships for the study of Asia. In 1942 and 1943 he was associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations while he did research in New York City. In 1948 Taylor took a leave of absence from the University of Washington to teach at the National War College. In subsequent years he lectured frequently there, as well as at the Army War College, Air War College, and Naval War College. He was consultant to the Institute of Asian Studies at the University of the Philippines in 1955 and 1956 and visiting professor at the University of the Philippines in 1956. From 1959 to 1963, he was chair of the Joint Committee on Contemporary China, sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council. He remained a committee member through 1969.

George Taylor was also associated for many years with the China Dynastic Histories Project. The project was begun in the 1930s in Peking by German scholar Karl Wittfogel with the goal of translating significant Chinese dynastic histories into English and publishing the texts with critical and explanatory commentary. Taylor was a member of the project's advisory committee when it was headquartered at Columbia University in the 1940s. Taylor was an important friend to Wittfogel and the history project in the 1950s and 1960s, when Wittfogel was ostracized by many Asia scholars for having testified against Owen Lattimore, a China scholar who was accused of being a Soviet spy by Senator Joseph McCarthy in 1950. Taylor brought Wittfogel and the China History Project to the University of Washington and provided funding for the project through the 1960s.

In 1963, President John F. Kennedy appointed Taylor to the Board of Foreign Scholarships, which controlled the Fulbright programs and set policies for other activities of the assistant secretary for cultural affairs of the Department of State. President Johnson reappointed him in 1966. Taylor served on State Department advisory panels on China and the Far East in 1967 and 1968, and on an advisory research committee for the American Enterprise Institute in 1969 and 1970.

Taylor was an outspoken supporter of the Chinese Nationalists and a critic of the Chinese Communists during the post-war Cold War years, and he continued to oppose U.S. recognition of mainland China in the 1960s. He also spoke out in defense of U.S. policy in Vietnam. In 1973, he wrote an editorial rebutting a statement written by Harvard sinologist John K. Fairbank and signed by twelve members of the University of Washington faculty that condemned the U.S. bombing of Hanoi.

Taylor's major publications include The Struggle for North China (1940), which was based on his observation, during the war, of Japanese methods of occupation in Northern China; America in the New Pacific (1942), The Philippines and the United States: Problems of Partnership (1964), The New United Nations: A Reappraisal of United States Policies (with Ben Cashman, 1965), and The Far East in the Modern World (with Franz Michael, 1956). He collaborated with George Savage, a member of the English department at the University of Washington, to write a play, The Phoenix and the Dwarfs, about the impact of the Japanese occupation on a North China village. In 1942 he wrote Changing China, a pamphlet used in the training of U.S. troops during World War II. Taylor was also credited with establishing interdisciplinary studies at the University of Washington and with promoting the study of non-western cultures in the U.S. after World War II. He retired from the University of Washington in 1975.

From 1976 to 1987, Taylor was president of the Washington Council on International Trade, a private organization created to promote foreign trade in the state of Washington. From 1987 to 1999, he was president and chairman of the board of the Florence R. Kluckhohn Center for the Study of Values in Bellingham, which he founded in 1987 to promote cross-cultural training and mediation. The center is named for Taylor's second wife, an anthropologist who taught at Harvard University. Taylor recruited Florence Kluckhohn and her husband Clyde Kluckhohn to work for the Office of War Information during World War II. From 1989 to 1999 Taylor oversaw the Washington World Affairs Fellows program, a foreign affairs seminar series for local community leaders that is affiliated with the World Affairs Council of Seattle and Tacoma. Taylor was also co-founder and first president of the Enological Society of the Pacific Northwest, organized in 1975 to promote understanding and appreciation of wine.

Content Description

The George Edward Taylor papers document Taylor's career as professor and chair of the University of Washington Far Eastern and Russian Institute (now the Jackson School of International Studies), scholar in Chinese studies, government expert on Asia, proponent of foreign trade, and wine enthusiast. The records span the period 1932 to 1999. Records include correspondence, conference files, research files, sound recordings, curriculum files, ephemera, interviews, lectures, news releases, photographs, and reports.

Acquisition Information

Received in various installments, 1971-2000.

Detailed Description of the Collection

Accession No. 1695-003: George Edward Taylor sound recording, 1966

1 sound tape reel

1 compact disc

Scope and Content: Consists of a reel-to-reel audiotape recording of "Far East 401," a lecture given on January 17, 1966, and a listening copy on compact disc. The lecturer is probably Franz Michael.

Restrictions on Access: The content of the recording is open to all users.

The original recording is not available for public use; however, a listening copy is available in the Special Collections division of the University of Washington Libraries.

A compact disc player is required for listening.

Acquisition Info: Donated by George Taylor in January 1989.

Accession No. 1695-004: Oral history interview with George Edward Taylor and Richard Louis Walker, 1992

4 sound cassettes (60 minutes each) (1 box)

Biographical/Historical Note: Richard Louis Walker was born in 1922 in Bellefonte, Pennsylvania. He served as an ambassador to Korea and was credited as the creator of the Institute of International Relations at the University of South Carolina.

Scope and Content: Oral history interview conducted by Ramon H. Myers in 1992 with George Edward Taylor and Richard Walker. The interview includes discussion of the role of the University of Washington Far Eastern and Russian Institute in the development of area studies, particularly Chinese studies, in the United States. Also included is a list of questions developed for the interview.

Restrictions on Access: The recordings are open to all users.

An audiocassette player is required for listening.

Restrictions on Use: The creator's literary rights have not been transferred to the University of Washington Libraries.

Acquisition Info: The audiocassettes were copied from 3 original open reel audiotapes by the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace, Stanford University, in June 1996, and purchased by the University of Washington Libraries.

Accession No. 1695-005: Oral history interview with George Edward Taylor, 1986

1 transcript (.03 cubic feet) (1 folder)

Scope and Content: Transcript, edited by Lois Logan Horn, of a tape-recorded interview she conducted with Taylor on March 27 and April 7, 1986. Taylor describes how he became interested in China; taught in China on a Harvard fellowship, 1937-1939; helped supply Chinese guerilla armies; and came to the University of Washington to head the Department of Oriental Studies. He also describes his work with the U.S. Office of War Information, 1942-1946, when he served as a deputy director. Taylor describes how he obtained administrative support for the University of Washington Far East and Russian Institute.

Restrictions on Access: The transcript is open to all users.

Restrictions on Use: The creator's literary rights have not been transferred to the University of Washington Libraries.

The transcript may be copied and quoted.

Acquisition Info: Donated by Lois Horn in November 1998.

Accession No. 1695-007: George Edward Taylor papers, 1932-1999

20.29 cubic feet, including photographs, slides, sound recordings, and video recordings (22 boxes and 1 package)

Arrangement: Arranged in 5 series:

Personal and professional papers, 1932-1999

University of Washington Far Eastern and Russian Institute records, 1939-1995

University of Washington committees, 1962-1976

United States Office of War Information, Overseas Operations Branch records, 1942-1949

Papers from other memberships and affiliations, 1933-1999

Scope and Content: This accession consists primarily of general correspondence, arranged alphabetically and by subject, and subject files relating to professional, teaching, and research activities of George Taylor. The accession also documents Taylor's leadership of the University of Washington Far Eastern and Russian Institute (1946-1969) and his participation in numerous scholarly organizations, governmental bodies, and other private organizations. Among these, the most prominent are records documenting his career at the U.S. Office of War Information Overseas Branch (1942 to 1949), his tenure as president of the Washington Council on International Trade (1975-1984), his administration of the Washington World Affairs Fellows program (1989-1999), his tenure as president of the Entomological Society of the Pacific Northwest (1976-1978), his tenure as president of the Board of Directors of the Tryout Theatre in Seattle (1948-1951), his chairmanship of the Joint Committee on Contemporary China (1959-1963), his experience teaching at Yenching University (1937-1941), his membership in the China Club of Seattle (1945, 1949-1950, 1973), and his involvement with joint projects of the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council to promote research on China. There are also records documenting Taylor's participation on several University of Washington committees: the International Programs Advisory Committee (1969-1971), the Senate Off-Campus Speaker Policy Committee (1962-1963), and the University Press Committee (1976). The accession also contains a small number of photographs, color slides, a map, ephemera, audiotapes, videotapes, and a phonograph record.

Restrictions on Access: Open to all users; however, access to package 23 is closed pending further review because it contains potentially sensitive personnel information.

Equipment or duplication is required to play audiocassette tapes, an audio microcassette tape, reel-to-reel audiotapes, videotapes, and a phonograph record.

Processing Info: Accession No. 1695-007 was processed between November 28, 2000, and June 1, 2001. It consists of several previously merged accessions. The first merger was made in 1983. It combined the papers in Accession Nos. 1695-71-14 and 1695-2-74-23, which were donated in small increments in 1971, 1974, and 1980, with materials transferred from the International Studies School in August 1979 and additional materials donated on September 16, 1983. On May 22, 2001, these materials were merged with papers donated by Margaret Perthou Taylor on July 28, 2000 (Accession No. 1695-006).

During processing, numerous classified documents were removed by the university's security officer for declassification. Four additional cartons of publications and reprints were also removed from the papers during processing and discarded.

University of Washington, Far Eastern and Russian Institute Records Scope and Content: The University of Washington Far Eastern and Russian Institute series consists of approximately two cubic feet of correspondence and other papers that pertain to Taylor's efforts to recruit faculty and attract funding for the institute. Correspondence with William Ballis (1947-1958) documents efforts to establish a Russian studies program. Letters from Charles Martin (1939-1946, 1969, undated) document Taylor's relationship with the university while he was working for the U.S. government during World War II. The Post-Retirement files contain tributes to Taylor, including a letter from University of Washington President Charles Odegaard nominating Taylor for a Medal of Merit from the state of Washington and summarizing his contributions to the University of Washington. The bulk of the remaining papers in this series pertain to administration of the institute, such as the hiring of faculty, curriculum development, fund-raising, and tensions		1939-1995

Letters and memos concern the operations of branches in the field, information about possible Japanese intelligence activity in the United States in the 1930s, and allegations concerning Japanese infiltration of the Institute of Pacific Relations during the 1930s. It also documents the agency's efforts to gather and interpret intelligence from Japan and Japanese-occupied regions, the recruitment of intelligence officers to serve overseas, the selection of propaganda materials for dissemination in Asia, and methods of psychological research undertaken by the agency. Reports include a 1945 intelligence report on peace sentiment among the Japanese armed forces and the report "Japanese Behavior Patterns," compiled by anthropologist Ruth Benedict. Also included are clippings Taylor gathered about the decision to drop atomic bombs on Japan. Classified materials have been removed from this series.

Chinese History Project

Scope and Content: The China History Project files document George Taylor's lifelong friendship and professional support of China scholar Karl August Wittfogel (1896-1988), a German sinologist whom Taylor met while he was in China in 1935. Wittfogel was director of the China Dynastic Histories Project. Begun in the 1930s in Peking and continued at Columbia University in New York in the 1940s and the University of Washington from the late 1940s to the late 1960s, it was created with

Tryout Theatre

Scope and Content: The Tryout Theatre files document an experimental theater that produced original plays in Seattle from 1943 to 1951, when it became affiliated with the University of Washington School of Drama. The papers date from the period 1941 to 1967 (bulk 1944-1951) and document Taylor's tenure as president of the board of directors, circa 1948 to 1951. General correspondence includes letters from people seeking work with the theater, playwrights regarding the theater's production of their work, and Taylor's efforts to find a benefactor for the theater when it hit hard times. Other files contain minutes of the board of directors, a history of the theater (1951), publicity, programs, transcripts of two reviews of The Purple Starfish (1949), notes, and clippings. Files on The Phoenix and the Dwarfs contain correspondence and clippings from 1944-1950, along with a manuscript copy of the play, written by George Taylor and George Savage, a member of the University of Washington English department faculty and neighbor of Taylor. Most of the correspondence in this series pertains to a review of the New York production of the play by Burton Rascoe in the January 8, 1945, issue of the New York World-Telegram, in which Rascoe accused the playwrights of idealizing the Red Army of China. This review made Taylor, then an employee of the Office of War Information, the subject of attacks from Congressman Upton Close. Much of the correspondence has to do with the efforts of Taylor and his friends and colleagues to defend the play and Taylor's reputation after publication of the Rascoe review and a similar piece in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. Also included is a private critique of a draft of the play and reviews following its publication in 1946.
