Historical Note

Barbara Bertha Vorse Fealy was born in 1903 in Salt Lake City, Utah to Albert Justin and Bettie Vorse. Mr. Vorse owned one of Utah's largest wholesale nurseries, and his daughter grew up assisting with his operation. Fealy worked with plants of all ages, from seedlings to large specimens, and was impressed with plants from an early age.

Albert Vorse was so impressed with his daughter's love of plants and her ability to draw that in 1921 he sent her to University of Illinois to study landscape architecture. This period of time was the end of the era of the first generation of landscape architects. Jens Jensen, a passionate advocate of native plants, was a visiting professor at the University of Illinois while Fealy was a student. Fealy especially remembers his field trip to the dunes in Indiana.

Surveying and drawing were two essential components of the curriculum while Fealy was at University of Illinois. This was during the era of the Beaux Arts movement, and the classical elements of drawing were emphasized. Fealy became fluent in pencil sketching, painting, and water colors. She loved art, and art influenced her perception of landscape architecture. She was particularly fond of John Constable's landscape paintings (England, late 1800s). Gertrude Jekyll also influenced Fealy's style

(England, gardens with exuberant floral display, late 1800s). She was impressed with the work of landscape architect Thomas Church, who promoted the idea that a house's landscape is a series of outdoor "rooms" which provide comfort and beauty.

Fealy distinctly remembers a school outing to estates along Chicago's North Shore, including the estate of the Armors. Servants waited on the students at a luncheon, and the budding practitioners were permitted to walk around the grounds. Fealy was impressed with this experience of unbridled wealth and its outpouring upon lavish landscapes. Her dream to work with affluent clients was later fulfilled with many projects in Portland's Dunthorpe and West Hills districts.

Fealy is not as well known as other prominent architects and landscape architects. This is probably because most of her work was for private residences. However, she did complete some commercial projects, and the finished landscapes were celebrated and well-liked. Among some of her works are the following:

- Catlin-Gabel School - Portland, Oregon
- Eagle Crest - Redmond, Oregon
- Evergreen Aviation - Hillsboro, Oregon
- First Unitarian Church - Portland, Oregon
- Graphic Arts Center - Portland, Oregon
- Leach Botanical Garden - Portland, Oregon
- Longview Medical Center - Longview, Washington
- Marquam Plaza Office Building - Portland, Oregon
- Oregon School of Arts and Crafts - Portland, Oregon
- Saint Pius X Parish - Portland, Oregon
- Salishan Lodge - Gleneden Beach, Oregon
- Skamania County Courthouse - Skamania, Washington
- Sokol Blosser Winery - Newberg, Oregon
- Timberline Lodge - Government Camp, Oregon
- Waverly Country Club - Lake Oswego, Oregon
- Western Forestry Center - Portland, Oregon
- Willamette View Manor - Milwaukie, Oregon
- Yurigawa Park - Sapporo, Japan

Following is a chronology of Fealy's personal and professional life:

- 1921 - 1925 Attended Landscape Architecture Program, University of Illinois
- 1925 - 1928 Salt Lake City Nursery
- 1928 - 1930 McCrary, Culley and Carhart
- 1930 Salt Lake City Nursery
- 1932 Worked as a librarian and landscape architect, Utah State Planning Commission
- 1934 Married Morris Hoag, an electrical engineer, and moved to Ogden where Mr. Hoag assisted with construction of the Hoover Dam
- 1934 Started private practice in Ogden, Utah
- 1935 - 1938 Authored newspaper series : Through the Garden Gate
- 1939 Morris Hoag died at age 35 (cancer); Draftwork, City of Los Angeles Hall of Records; Draftwork, North American Aviation
- 1945 Married William Fealy
- 1947 - 1974 Portland early work
- 1965 - 1995 Portland mature work
- 1989 Won ASLA award for her work on the Faber Lewis Garden
- 1995 - 1997 Lived in Seattle with daughter Susan Valencia
- 1997 - 2000 Lived in Beaverton, Oregon apartment

2001 Died

Fealy had one daughter, Susan Fealy, who also goes by the name Valencia. Valencia has two children, Fealy's grandchildren, named Gabriel Valencia and Allegra Doherty.

Knowledge of Fealy's work spread by word of mouth. 1964 was a pivotal year for Fealy. John Gray, a prominent Portland developer, retained her to model the landscape for what was to become Salishan Lodge on the Oregon Coast. Her design gained her instant recognition. After that project, many wealthy and prominent clients sought her services.

Because her work was in high demand, Fealy was able to be selective about her clients. Clients' first letters to Fealy often expressed honor at Fealy's acceptance of their projects. And just as Fealy chose her jobs, she was particular about her craftspeople. She would work exclusively with specific craftspeople, and everyone involved in a project worked together as a team. Ron Vandehey was her contractor from the 1970s forward. Roy Haftorson was her concrete contractor. She also preferred certain masons. Fealy would manage landscape installation to continue the creative process and to control the project. Through this selection of craftspeople and on-site installation management, Fealy was able to achieve the level of fine quality materials and craft exhibited in her work.

Fealy would start the design process by meeting with a prospective client and learning the job requirements. A technical report would often be produced to manifest the topographical contours of the site. Fealy would then work out a preliminary plan and present it to the client. Revisions would lead to a final plan - usually 2H on vellum. Dates would be lined up and installation would begin.

It has been said that Fealy's designs seem as if they are the only and most appropriate solution to each job. Landscape "rooms" compose each site, with transitions that move a person from room to room. Space is generous, yet proportionate with nearby buildings and surrounding scenes. A room often will consist of a hard surface, such as exposed aggregate concrete, flagstone, or crushed gravel, articulated with surprising creativity, framing or being framed by superb compositions of plants. Boulders, mounds, and sculptures frequently augment the scene. Carefully designed fences, walls, lamps, and other implements further extend the design theme. All is done with simplicity. Common feelings are peace, visual pleasure, and comfort when one is in a space designed by Fealy. There is a timeless quality. The design is always sophisticated, understated, simple.

Fealy's clients sometimes became her personal friends, and long-lasting relationships bloomed. Client letters to her during or after jobs frequently display affection.

Fealy continued practicing landscape architecture through 1995, when she was 92 years old. She then lived with her daughter for two years in Seattle and then in an apartment in Beaverton, Oregon, where she lived until her death in December 2000. She loved landscape architecture and said she could not think of another career that would have given her greater satisfaction.

Content Description

The Barbara Fealy Landscape Architect Records are composed of four series: client files, miscellaneous files, photographs, and architectural drawings. Although Fealy worked as a landscape architect since the 1930s, most of the collection is records of her work in the 1980s and early 1990s. There are, however, some pre-1980s materials in the collection.

Series I: Client Files. Client files contain documents such as correspondence, notes, estimates, and billings relating to jobs and projects Fealy worked on. They are arranged alphabetically by client surname. The original files received by the library included photographs, which were removed during processing of the collection and now form a separate series. Likewise, large-size plans, once folded and inserted in the original files, were flattened and incorporated into a separate series. The client and miscellaneous documents in the original files were not ordered thematically or chronologically, and they were often folded. Thus, the documents were flattened, separated into client files and miscellaneous files, and organized alphabetically by client surname and occasionally by project name within each of these two series.

Series II: Miscellaneous Files. The miscellaneous files contain files that are not files from specific jobs, such as client lists and notebooks. They are organized alphabetically.

Series III: Photographs (stored under call number PH350). Many of the photos came mixed in with client files and miscellaneous files, and they were taken out and stored separately during processing to better preserve them. The photographs are views of Fealy's work sites prior to or after landscaping, and they are primarily 35-millimeter color snapshots. However, black and white photographs are sometimes present. There are also occasional shots of works in progress. It is presumed that Fealy took most of these photographs herself, though it is possible that her clients took some of them and mailed them to her. The photographs are arranged alphabetically by client surname.

Series IV: Architectural Files. Many of the architectural drawings were originally folded up within client files when they arrived at the library. In order to better preserve and organize these drawings, they were taken out of client files during library processing, flattened, and placed into their own series in large flat folders. The drawings are arranged alphabetically by client surname. There are many types of architectural drawings, including general landscaping plans, sections, perspectives, detailed construction drawings, irrigation plans, planting plans, and many related themes. Not all drawings in this collection were executed by Fealy; some were drawn by her mentors (Marlene Salon in particular), and some appear to have been outsourced (most likely when Fealy was exceptionally busy and needed the work done immediately). It is easy to recognize Fealy's work. Her plans are easy to read and understand; one can easily see her intended landscape.

The architectural drawings vary in size, scope, and execution. Most of Fealy's drawings are finished plans with 2H pencil on vellum. Bluelines or blacklines also comprise this series. The finished drawings range in size from approximately 8-1/2" x 11" to 42" x 50". Drawings with approximate dimensions of 24" x 36" or 36" x 48" are the most common size in this collection. Fealy also made drawings with 2H pencil directly on trace paper, which were usually preliminary to final drawings. It is exceptionally rare to find work in pen, as pencil was the instrument of choice. Occasionally, Barbara wrote with pencil on top of a blueline or blackline to further the design process. Colored pencil renderings are infrequent but present. Original drafting tape remained on some documents, and this was retained. There is one example of trace still taped to the document, with a creative session of pencil gestures unfolding into a new design.
