Historical Note

Walter S. Bowman (1865-1938) was a professional photographer who worked in Pendleton, Oregon, from the late 1880s to the mid 1930s. Bowman's photographs document daily life in Eastern Oregon, including special events such as the Pendleton Round-Up. He was particularly noted for his portraits of tribal people, many of which were destroyed.

The Bowman collection is one of a series of photographic collections from the Pendleton area, 1880s-1920s. As a member of the Pendleton Camera Club, Bowman knew O.C. Allen and Lee Moorhouse, and may have been responsible for Moorhouse's interest in photography. Bowman images also appear in the Moorhouse collection, the Furlong collection, and the Drake collection. Born on Birch Creek, Oregon, Bowman began studying photography under T.C. Ward in 1887. Bowman purchased Ward's studio in 1890 and continued to work as Pendleton's premier photographer until his retirement in the mid 1930s. The Bowman Studio was housed in a building right on the banks of the Umatilla River. Images of the original studio exist but its replacement sits on the original site, and continues to house a photographic studio.

Walter S. Bowman was a member of a prominent pioneer family in Pendleton, coming west from Iowa in 1862. While his cousin, Purl Oliver Bowman, was building the Bowman Hotel, Walter "wanted to use his camera to record the West." Lee Moorhouse lived with the Bowman family when he first arrived in the area, and may have learned photography from Bowman.

Purl's daughter, Florence Bowman Windsor, recalled that Walter owned the first car in Pendleton, possibly a Maxwell, and was arrested for driving twelve miles an hour down Main Street. Walter S. Bowman died from injuries received in a car crash that also injured his wife.

Content Description

The collection comprises 379 glass-plate negatives, 51 cellulose acetate negatives, 28 safety negatives (replacing nitrate originals), and approximately 200 silver gelatin photographic prints.

The collection is organized into series by subject: Actors and dancers - 8 items Buildings - 53 items Cities and towns - 18 items Farms and ranches - 20 items Interiors - 23 items Horses - 4 items Parades - 23 items Portraits - 52 items Railroads - 11 items Recreation - 25 items Scenic views - 7 items Sports - 30 items U.S. Army - 9 items Miscellaneous - 7 items

At Bowman's death the collection passed into the hands of the Umatilla County Court. Judge James H. Sturgis and Lee D. Drake (long-time partner in the East Oregonian Publishing Co., and at the time head of the Old Oregon Trail Committee of Umatilla County) selected those negatives "worth while" and destroyed the rest (at least 900 images). The Library provided prints of the Bowman negatives to the donors, which presumably went to the Umatilla County Historical Society.

During the indexing of the Walter S. Bowman Photographs some questions concerning the provenance of the safety film images have arisen. For instance, B389 "Red Boy Mine" is also part of the General Print Collection (A4189) and listed in the Photo Print Index (Mines and Mining, Oregon, Red Boy Mine, Clear cree, Grant County, Oregon, Bowman photo A4189.Cn107). This print may have been transferred from the Lee P. Drake Photographs (PH021, Ax 27, Drake 4) to the General Print Collection (A4189). Safety negatives made from this print may have been accessioned into the Bowman Collection (B389) and the Copy Negative Collection (CN107).

In contrast, a print of safety negative B385 "Lorenzen's Thrashing Outfit, 1907," Morefield is included in the Lee D. Drake Photographs (PH021, Box 5, Drake 29). The name Morefield, etched into the emulsion on the lower right-hand corner, clearly identifies the photographer of this image. Unless clearly labeled as a W. S. Bowman photograph, the provenance of the safety negatives B378-B405 should remain in question.
