Biographical Note

Emily Haig (1890-1978) was an ardent conservationist who was active in conservation organizations and activities beginning in 1912. At that time Haig became a member of the Sierra Club and joined in the opposition to the construction of the Hetch Hetchy Dam in Yosemite. In 1923 she came to Seattle, where she continued her involvement in conservation and became active in the Parent and Teachers Association (state president from 1934-1938), the Seattle Girl Scouts, and the American National Red Cross (board member of the Seattle-King County chapter). She was also a board member of the North Cascades Conservation Council, the Olympic Park Associates, the Nature Conservancy (Washington chapter), the Natural Resources Forum, and the Washington Arboretum Foundation. In addition, she was president of the Seattle Audubon Society and an active member of the Seattle Mountaineers, the Federation of Western Outdoor Clubs, the Pacific Northwest Chapter of the Sierra Club, and the Washington Environmental Council. Haig was a force behind the establishment of the Japanese Tea Garden and the Foster Island Bird Sanctuary in the University of Washington Arboretum in Seattle. She was also involved in the protection of other areas in the state, including Leadbetter Point, sections of Olympic and Rainier National Parks, North Cascades National Park, Glacier Peak Wilderness Area, Nisqually Delta, and many others.

Content Description

The collection consists of personal papers and materials related to Haig's involvement with conservation groups and other organizations from 1933 to 1972. Her personal papers include correspondence, writings, reports, photographs, and other materials largely relating to the many conservation causes with which she was involved. Also included in the personal papers series are several folders of congressional bills from both the U.S. House and the U.S. Senate, 1957-1967.

Haig's active involvement with conservation issues is documented in the conservation organizations series, which includes materials from organizations such as the Mountaineers, the Arboretum Foundation, and the Nature Conservancy. The Sierra Club papers in this series include materials documenting the dispute between the Sierra Club board of directors and Executive Director Dave Brower, 1967-1969.

The series related to organizations not primarily concerned with conservation documents Haig's involvement with the American Red Cross, the Girl Scouts of America, and the Parents and Teachers Association, among others.

Major correspondents include Henry M. Jackson, Warren G. Magnuson, Thomas M. Pelly, Brock Evans, and Patrick D. Goldsworthy.

Sierra Club

In 1967-1969, the Sierra Club headquarters staff underwent a period of sharp controversy during which part of the board of directors was pitted against Executive Director Dave Brewer. Other individuals and chapters joined the dispute, which culminated in a board election with two slates of nominees ranged against one another. The dispute began over a board decision regarding a California Pacific Gas & Electric power plant to be built in Diablo Canyon on the California Coast. Dave Brower was accused of going against the wishes of the board and the membership. From that point, charges and counter-charges escalated and spread. Brower was accused of mishandling finances in the Sierra Club publications program. At the same time, the IRS revoked the Sierra Club tax status, initiating a long legal battle. This issue also eventually became part of the earlier controversy. Finally, a "grass-roots" committee was formed called Committee for an Active Bold Constructive Sierra Club (ABC).

Material regarding the club's internal dispute is arranged in a subject series called "Sierra Club organizational crisis," with subseries for general correspondence arranged chronologically, and followed by the various aspects of the controversy arranged by subject or other series. Additional material can be found under the minutes and reports series for the period 1967-1969.
