Historical Note

The Northwest Ethnohistory collection consists of the records generated through the research and academic efforts of several generations of Western Washington University anthropology professors. Creators of the collection included Dr. Daniel L. Boxberger and Dr. Herbert Cecil Taylor. Before its transfer to the Center for Pacific Northwest Studies, the collection served as the anthropology department's archive of source material.

Content Description

The Northwest Ethnohistory collection includes oral histories, manuscripts, correspondence, maps, bibliographies, publications and photographs relating to various Native American tribes in the Pacific Northwest. Native American tribes documented in the collection include Chehalis, Shoalwater, Chinook, Clallam, Clatsop, Cowlitz, Duwamish, Haida, Klamath, Klickitat, Kwakiutl, Lummi, Makah, Muckleshoot, Nisqually, Nooksack, Puyallup, Quileute, Quinault, Salish, Semiahmoo, Skagit, Snohomish, Squaxin, Steilacoom, Suiattle-Sauk, Swinomish, and Suquamish. The records contain information about the various tribes' art, ethnic identity, family relationships, and indigenous languages. The collection also documents fishing, hunting, and whaling practices, and the social conditions and material culture of these indigenous people. The records provide insight into the tribes' social life and customs, including their legends, religious rites and ceremonies. There are also a large number of documents related to politics and government relations including the legal status of tribes, and laws regarding land tenures and treaties.

Much of the collection consists of duplicates of primary and secondary materials available in other repositories and is not archival in composition. The value of the collection lies in the research convenience of having these unique and difficult to find materials located in one source. The collection has not been processed and the collection inventory provides only file level inventory of the collection. The records were initially "reorganized" into classification system based on Native American tribal associations by a staff member in the Anthropology Department. That system was abandoned about halfway through the collection and final files represent the filing system used by the creators.

Use of the Collection

Preferred Citation

Administrative Information

Arrangement

The Northwest Ethnohistory collection was initially "reorganized" by a staff member in the WWU's anthropology department into a classification system based on Native American tribal associations. However, that system was abandoned part of the way through the collection, and the remaining organizational scheme represents the filing system used by the creators. In order to find relevant materials, researchers are strongly encouraged to explore the entire Northwest Ethnohistory finding aid.

Custodial History

The Northwest Ethnohistory collection was donated to the Center for Pacific Northwest Studies by Dr. Daniel Boxberger of the Anthropology Department at Western Washington University in 1999.
